COUNCIL FAILS TO COLLECT £3.5m TAX

Bills dodged despite 35,000 summons sent out

By Lucy Purdy

CASH-STRAPPED Haringey Council failed to collect £3.5million in council tax last year, the Advertiser can reveal.

Despite the authority facing a £87m budget black hole over the next three years, council tax arrears stood at 2.7 per cent in December, meaning Haringey is missing out on about £2.7m once the Greater London Authority's share is taken out.

But council chiefs said that they face a tough challenge in chasing up unpaid bills due to the transient nature of Haringey's population and insist they do their best to bring the borough's tax dodgers to book.

Some 35,000 court summons were issued to Haringey residents in council tax arrears in 2009/10 and a further 25,000 people have received summons since April last year.

According to a recent BBC investigation, Lambeth had the most uncollected council tax in London in 2009/10, with £8.9m being "missed", and nationally a staggering £530m in council tax went uncollected. This is despite local authorities facing unprecedented budget cuts.

In Haringey, youth services face being slashed by 75 per cent and drop-in services and respite care for the elderly and disabled are also under threat. Some 1,000 jobs at the council are set to go as well as 51 valuable teacher training staff at the Professional Development Centre in Downhills Park Road, Tottenham.

Detailed budget plans will be presented at a full council meeting at Wood Green civic centre at 7pm tomorrow. Protesters from a huge range of different groups, which together make up the Haringey Alliance For Public Services, will stage a rally before the meeting to urge councillors to protect the borough's public services.

In a message to councillors this week, a HAPS spokesman said: "You are being asked to implement savage cuts that you know, and have publicly acknowledged, will cause harm and distress to residents and workers."

A council spokesman said: "Council tax arrears in Haringey are comparable with other London councils such as Barking and Dagen-

'You are being asked to implement savage cuts you know will cause harm.'

ham, Hackney, Lewisham and Southwark, with similar population profiles in terms of transience and deprivation.

"We are robust in issuing summonses and this often leads to people settling up straight away without actually going to court."

"Particularly in these current times, if people think they are going to have difficulty paying we encourage them to contact us as soon as possible. We can advise them about whether they are entitled to any rebates, discounts or exemptions and to advise on a repayment plan."

£50m cut to fund set up for upgrade of housing

RESIDENTS of council homes in Haringey have been dealt a huge blow as the government announced a £50million funding cut to the borough's decent homes programme.

Homes For Haringey had been allocated £85.6million over the next two years to improve properties across the borough – a figure now cut to just £36m.

The government's Decent Homes Standard aims to provide a minimum standing of housing conditions for the public sector.

Council leader Claire Kober said: "The government's funding cuts will deal a massive blow to residents across the borough who have patiently waited to see new kitchens, bathrooms and windows installed. With the reduced resources available, Homes For Haringey and the council will continue to maximise every penny to make as many homes decent as possible."

Phil Goodwin, council tenant and vice-chairman of the Homes For Haringey board, added: "This news will be devastating to residents still waiting for work, especially as they have seen so much carried out across the borough since 2008. We now need a conversation with our residents about how we can seek to meet their aspirations with less money."

Michael Gove admits school fund formula needs reform

By Lucy Purdy

THE coalition government has announced it will review Haringey's "unfair" school funding in the spring after years of campaigning by teachers, headteachers, parents and political groups.

In a letter to Hornsey and Wood Green MP Lynne Featherstone, education secretary Michael Gove said: "I agree the school funding system needs reforming. As you say, currently schools facing similar challenges can receive vastly different levels of funding, for no reason other than historical accident and an out-of-date assessment of need."

Mr Gove noted Haringey's unusual school funding case, in which schools receive up to £1,300 less per pupil than neighbouring boroughs such as Hackney and Camden. He confirmed that Haringey's unique circumstances will be considered as part of a review to make the national funding formula fairer and more transparent, due to be launched in the spring. The funding shortfall results from local teachers getting paid inner London wages but schools receiving funding as an "outer-London" borough.

In an unprecedented alliance of Haringey's political parties, trade unions and other groups, all bodies interested in education in the borough joined forces in the Fair Deal For Haringey Children campaign.

But the announcement also sparked a political row.

Welcoming the news, Ms Featherstone said: "This is a real step forward for Haringey's children, and for fair funding for our schools."

"I'll be campaigning all-out to make sure that local people respond to the consultation later on in the spring. Haringey's special case has at last been recognised."

But Labour MP David Lammy, who represents Tottenham, accused Liberal Democrat Ms Featherstone of "crass political opportunism" as her party has

Review:
Education
secretary

voted to treble tuition fees, abolish the educational maintenance allowance and cut library and youth services since joining forces with the Conservatives in government.

Mr Lammy said: "Hundreds of Haringey residents contributed to a consultation that concluded in June last year but their voices were ignored by Lynne Featherstone's government colleagues who decided to conduct yet another review."

"This is a decision that can be made now and does not need another consultation."

But Ms Featherstone argued that this review would finally tackle the system's "underlying unfairness".

She said: "In 2010, the Labour government finally agreed to launch a review into school funding, yet this was not a fundamental review of school funding which would have corrected this historical unfairness."

"The best option on the table was for a hybrid option that would, at best, give Haringey's pupils something in the region of an extra 6.6 per cent in school funding."

"Despite tough economic times, the coalition government will now look at the underlying unfairness in the school funding formula - something that Labour wasn't prepared to do, even in times of prosperity."

Designer uses cancer to show off her creative talents

By Kim Inam

A FASHION graduate from Wood Green who was diagnosed with cancer just as she completed her degree has been harnessing her design skills to commemorate losing her hair.

Maya Lund was diagnosed with cancer five days before she handed in her final project at Middlesex University last summer. The 25-year-old spent the final term of her BA Fashion degree battling fatigue as she juggled her coursework and underwent biopsies on a lump in her neck. It took several months for her to get a firm diagnosis and then it was confirmed she had a form of lymphoma. The designer had to put her career on hold and move back home to start treatment immediately.

Within a few weeks Maya was going through chemotherapy but started an online photographic diary of her journey, showing off her bald scalp and creating hats out of different materials or using her bare skin as a canvass.

She said: "At the beginning I was stuck at home all the time because I was too ill to go out. The photo blog gave me a structure to my life – all I was doing was going from one hospital appointment to a doctor's visit.

"I was reading a lot of really wordy blogs and I found it incredibly difficult to keep my concentration. I couldn't read more than a page and it wouldn't sink in, so I thought I would create a more visual blog."

The young designer has used all sorts of materials in her creations, from autumn leaves to old toys and sticky eyes.

She said: "Once, when I was quite far into my treatment and had more energy, I went to a gig with my friends. I felt like my old self, in my old clothes, in my old life going to the bar getting a drink. Once there I took my hat off and people started staring at me. It brought me down to reality and reminded me what I was going through."

Through her blog Maya hopes to raise the profile of the Teenage Cancer Trust. She said:

"When I was in the cancer ward there was no one my age there – it was very isolating. My worries and concerns were different to the older generation – they had mortgages and husbands or wives. I was worried about my career and how it had come to a standstill.

"The Teenage Cancer Trust website was so helpful, it had so much practical advice and a forum where you could talk to other young patients. I think it would have helped me if I had known about the site earlier."

Maya has just started a month-long course of radiotherapy, but hopes to get back to full health soon and resume her career.

She added: "I'm hoping the images will help people in a similar situation, dealing with chemotherapy and losing their hair. Being able to make someone smile would be quite nice."

Portraits through a lens to tell stories of inequality

A PHOTOGRAPHER with a passion for capturing human stories is on the lookout for willing subjects in Haringey as he attempts to chart the borough's inequalities in a documentary project.

Charles Fox, 31, has been travelling around Haringey taking photos of residents as part of his degree in photo journalism at London College of Arts. He chose to travel north from his home in London Bridge to focus on London's most divided borough – of Haringey's 19 wards, four are in the richest ten per cent and five are in the poorest ten per cent in the capital.

"I didn't understand how you could be in one area yet, two streets down, people have a completely different way of life," Charles told the Advertiser.

"I lived in Cambodia for three years and when I moved to London I wanted to live somewhere which was a bit more representative of what I'd seen. In places such as Haringey there are so many different cultures and different types of people, and you experience a similar diversity of life as I did overseas."

Through portraits and extended captions, Charles will chart the lives of people who live in different parts of Haringey and has already met some interesting characters through his travels to spots such as Muswell Hill, Crouch End and Northumberland Park.

Lives in pictures: Charles Fox is documenting the rich variety of human stories in the borough

He said: "People's reactions have been wholly positive. Everyone seems to think it's really interesting. The project is not about labelling or classifying anybody, just exploring these inequalities which everyone knows exist.

"I've found it fascinating so far. I went into a few Tottenham supporters' pubs and everyone was great. I've heard about one Spurs supporter who is supposed to have his face literally covered in tattoos. I would love to find him."

The photos will form part of a project at the university in May. Email cjf@charles-fox.net to find out more.

Council protects key service by initiative with neighbour

HARINGEY COUNCIL chiefs have agreed to team up with neighbouring Waltham Forest to share economic development services – saving the cash-strapped authority an estimated £100,000 per year.

In what is billed as a "creative solution" to help ease an estimated budget black hole of £87million in Haringey over the next three years, cabinet members from the two authorities agreed an initial business case to pave the way for the two councils working together. Shared services will include schemes to tackle unemployment, promote social inclusion, run youth employment initiatives and attract investment for business and enterprise. Work could begin as early as June. The report also suggests the partnership could be rolled out elsewhere and eventually result in a "north London economic development service".

Councillor Toni Mallett, cabinet member for planning and regeneration, said: "Staying as we are would not deliver the savings we need while also protecting a valuable service. This is a really creative solution which will allow us to work together to boost employment opportunities and support local enterprise."

The decision is expected to save £198,842 across the two councils. This is in addition to the restructuring of planning, regeneration and economy services which have already been carried out in each borough, saving an estimated £174,000 in Haringey.

Officers will also work with local businesses to address skills gaps in the labour market, secure job opportunities for Haringey residents, develop enterprise initiatives and establish possible opportunities for apprenticeships.

Four jobs in Haringey are likely to be cut as part of the reshuffle with final decisions on redundancies being made by the end of March.

Unclaimed EuroMillions

A WINNING lottery ticket worth £183,908, which was bought in Haringey in January, has still not been claimed.

Residents who regularly play the lottery are being urged to look at their tickets to check whether they have scooped the EuroMillions prize which was drawn on January 28.

The winning numbers on that day were 13, 23, 24, 41, 42 and the Lucky Star numbers were 1 and 5. The ticket-holder has until 5.30pm on July 27 to claim.

A National Lottery spokesman said: "We're urging everyone to check their old tickets or look anywhere a missing ticket could be hiding. Try checking down the back of the sofa – someone out there could literally be sitting on a fortune!"

Anyone who believes they have won should call the National Lottery Line on 0845 910 0000.

Jail for fraudster who ran £200,000 holiday villa con

A FRAUDSTER who tricked holidaying families out of £200,000 and left hundreds stranded overseas has been ordered to spend four years behind bars.

Carlo Bulley, who lived in Highgate and Muswell Hill during the time he was peddling the scam, advertised phantom holiday properties online before taking cash from his victims by bank transfer or through PayPal.

Honeymooning couples, wedding parties, families with young children and pregnant women were among those hit by the cruel 38-year-old, who organised at least 116 bookings between 2006 and September last year.

Because Bulley used to live in Hove, a joint investigation was launched by Sussex police and officers in Haringey who eventually brought the prolific conman to justice.

Detective constable Tracey Dixon, from Brighton CID, worked with detective constable Tommy Dodds of Haringey CID, who received a number of reports from victims.

DC Dixon said: "Bulley communicated with his victims right up to the point of their holiday departure. He was aware of each of the victims' circumstances and still he allowed them to travel, knowing he would be leaving them stranded abroad, distressed and out of pocket."

"The accounts from the victims in this case show what an appalling situation Bulley had created by his own greed and deceit."

People across Europe, Russia, Dubai, the USA, New Zealand, Australia, Hong Kong and South Africa were also targeted by Bulley, who was helped by his then-girlfriend Jaana Kettunen. Bulley continued to dupe victims even after his girlfriend and both of his elderly parents had been arrested and faced certain prosecution.

Kettunen, 38, of Brunswick Place, Hove, pleaded guilty to money laundering in November last year and was remanded in custody. Having already served the equivalent of one-year in prison on remand, she has been given a community order and is required to carry out 200 hours of unpaid work.

NEWS

By Lucy Purdy

A VICAR from Finsbury Park has welcomed plans to allow gay and lesbian couples to marry in places of worship.

Openly gay vicar Reverend Stephen Coles is in full support of the plan by the coalition government to lift a ban on gay people being allowed to take their vows in a religious setting. The controversial shift in policy, announced last week by Hornsey and Wood Green MP Lynne Featherstone in her capacity as Minister for Equalities, will leave faith groups to make up their own minds on "gay weddings".

While some Christian groups argue that the change might put pressure on churches to accept ceremonies they are not comfortable with, Reverend Coles, from St Thomas' Church in St Thomas' Road, told the Advertiser that he believes the new policy is about progress not coercion.

He said: "When civil partnerships came in, the government was very keen that something should be available in law for same-sex couples – but it deliberately did not call it marriage as that would have sparked an almighty row. So it got something on the statute books but it was always going to be a temporary measure."

"The pressure has now built up again five or so years later and it seems to me it is perfectly reasonable that it has responded to this request. The legislation is explicit that nobody is being forced to do it – so that argument doesn't wash."

"What I think it will do is increase the pressure on groups to decide what they do want to do. There is a mood around that there needs to be a real discussion about the relationship between legislation on conscience. I think the established church, my church, is in a very interesting position. Where do we sit?"

He added that he believes those in opposition to change are "very vocal and very well organised" but not as numerous as they appear to be.

Quakers, Liberal Jews and Unitarians have welcomed the move but the Roman Catholic church and Church of England have been less enthusiastic.

Michael Hutchinson, speaking on behalf of Quakers in Britain, backed the proposed changes, saying that his community "warmly welcomed" the news.

Support: Reverend Stephen Coles welcomes plans to lift a ban on gay people marrying in a religious setting

Vicar backs changes to legislation on gay marriage

He said: "We are also heartened by proposals to address calls for full equality of civil marriages and civil partnerships, as our religious experience leads us to seek a change in the law so that same sex marriages can be celebrated, witnessed and reported to the state in the same way as heterosexual marriages."

Proposals also include allowing heterosexual couples to take part in civil partnerships.

Young couple Tom Freeman and Katherine Doyle, from Islington, launched a legal challenge to the ban on opposite-sex civil partnerships, arguing that they want the same legal rights as any husband and wife but do not want to "collude" with the segregation in law between gay civil partnerships and straight marriages. The 25-year-olds have said they are willing to take their appeal all the way to the European Court of Human Rights.

Announcing the consultation at the end of last week, Ms Featherstone explained why the government had taken the action.

"Over the past few months I've spoken to a lot of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people and campaign groups, and it became clear that there is a real desire to address the differences between civil marriage and civil partnerships," she said.

"I'm delighted to be part of the first British government to formally look at what steps can be taken to address this."

Clothing firm manager slams new extension to CPZ parking

THE manager of a business based in Bounds Green has slammed new parking restrictions there which he said are making it "virtually impossible" for workers to park their cars.

Bob Tims, who runs a clothing business in Myddleton Road called Cambra Styles, has hit out at decision makers at Haringey Council who he says are "totally ignoring" the needs of small businesses such as his.

The Bounds Green controlled parking zone will be extended to Thorold Road, Manor Road and Marlborough Road from March 14 after people who live in the area complained about traffic problems. The new zone will operate between 10am and 12noon, Mondays to Fridays, following a consultation with residents.

Mr Tims said: "It is fine for Haringey to trot out the platitudes about encouraging the use of more sustainable forms of transport, such as walking, cycling and public transport, but it totally ignores the needs of small businesses such as ours who have long-standing, skilled employees who commute in from a wide area, which would not be possible without car usage."

Work has already started on getting the new zone ready for March 14, including new signs and the painting of new double yellow lines. Mr Tims said it seemed that the only solution available to people who drive their cars to work is to move their vehicles twice in three hours.

He said: "You only have to look at the council vehicles which are parked by box junctions, taking photos of other vehicles who get stuck trying to cross the junction to realise the true reason Haringey is desperate to extend the CPZ. Parking and cars equal money."

Haringey cabinet member of neighbourhoods, Nilgun Canver, said: "The CPZ was introduced after extensive consultation and petitions from residents asking for parking restrictions on their roads following the introduction of the earlier Bounds Green CPZ."

"Parking within the CPZ is only prohibited for two hours a day, preventing all-day commuter parking which was causing problems for residents. The two-hour CPZ was simply introduced to support residents. Businesses in the area are well served by public transport including the Tube, mainline trains and extensive bus networks."

"Business parking permits are available from the council for those who need them."

Cabaret is kicking high at Lauderdale

AS SALLY BOWLES famously sang, "What good is sitting alone in your room? Come hear the music play. Life is a cabaret, old chum, come to the cabaret..."

Seeking sanctuary from the bright lights of the West End these lovely ladies and gregarious gentlemen are enjoying the latest Cabaret In The House season taking place at Lauderdale House in Highgate Hill, Highgate.

Once again organisers have assembled some of the best names in the business, luring them away from the big venues for an afternoon sojourn in north London to perform at one of the longest running cabaret shows in the capital.

The latest double bill for your delectation is Denise Black and Graeme Taylor, performing this Sunday. Best known for Corrie and Queer As Folk, Denise also has a lot of musical theatre under her belt and a couple of years ago had the good fortune to meet Rolf Harris' guitarist, Graeme Taylor. Together they've made an album, boasted a sell-out week at the Pizza In The Park and have a number of dates booked into the National Theatre no less.

They are followed on March 6 by Stuart Matthew Price who stormed onto the musical scene in the acclaimed production of Parade At The Donmar, while he is followed on March 13 by Daniel Koek who is currently starring in Craig Revel Horwood's production of Chess.

● All shows start at 4.30pm and tickets cost £13 (£11 concessions). For more details and reservations call the box office on 020 8348 8716.

Last rites for a plot

The Rite (15)

Dir: Mikael Hafstrom
Starring: Anthony Hopkins, Colin O'Donoghue, Marta Gastini

WHAT'S that you're trying to cast out, Tony? All those rotten films and phoned-in performances you've been peddling us for years?

Don't get me wrong. Anthony Hopkins is one fine actor. His butler in The Remains Of The Day was a nuanced portrait of English repression while it's hard to imagine a more sinister embodiment of pure evil than dear old Dr Lecter in The Silence Of The Lambs.

But then he got lazy. Like that other great talent, Robert DeNiro, Tony started to repeat himself so now both seem like parodies of their former selves. This is continued in this average exorcism thriller in which the Welsh hellraiser plays a legendary priest who has performed thousands of exorcisms. A young novice, Michael (Colin O'Donoghue) comes to visit the unorthodox Father Lucas (Anthony Hopkins) as he's attending exorcism school in the Vatican (now that's my kinda school!) and has serious doubts about whether people really are possessed by demons or whether it's a peculiar psychological state of mind.

The kindly Lucas allows him to attend a few of his exorcisms, one in particular affects him – a young, pregnant girl, raped by her father, who certainly seems to have hooked up with Beelzebub – but then something weird happens to Lucas himself and Hopkins turns a little bit Hannibal on his protégé...

Dodgy dialogue: Anthony Hopkins struggles to lift a flat script

Unfit to worship at the upturned crucifix of the grisly grand-daddy of these kind of films, The Exorcist, this is pretty risible fare with lame dialogue, predictable plotting and two-dimensional characters.

I enjoyed the theoretical stuff – apparently priests need to discover the demon's name before they can expel it – and would like to have spent longer in the lecture hall with Michael, because the rest of the time it's as predictable as Hopkins giving that dead-eyed Dr Lecter stare and overenunciating his words in a very slow and sinister fashion when he tips over to the dark side.

True Grit (15)

Returning to the original source material, the Coens fashion a bloodier, truer adaptation than the John Wayne version that is also less eccentric than their typical offerings. A 14-year-old girl hires a tough marshal to hunt the man who killed her father. Jeff Bridges acts up a storm as always.

Never Let Me Go (15)

A curious, cold adaptation of the curious, cold book and one of the most downbeat, eerie sci-fi films you will ever see. Carey Mulligan, Andrew Garfield and Keira Knightley play three confused youths each in possession of a terrible future. Interesting failure.

The Fighter (15)

Real-life Rocky follows formula. Massachusetts boxer Micky Ward's (Mark Wahlberg) fraught family sparring rivals aggression in the ring. Christian Bale rules the ring as a gaunt, wild-eyed crack-addicted loser.

Black Swan (15)

Bloody, barmy and brilliant. Mad mash of The Red Shoes, Performance and Fight Club, just take a deep breath and be submerged in doppelgangers and divas as Natalie Portman proves she is far from just a pretty face.

The Gannets

Samdan Meze And Grill House
32-34 The Green, Winchmore Hill

www.samdanmezeandgrill.com

STEPPING into Samdan restaurant is like entering a warm cocoon of indulgence.

Quietly buzzing, even on a drizzly Tuesday evening, the restaurant is decked out in rich reds, golds and soft greens while softly glowing lamps hang from every corner, casting dappled light on to the walls.

Gangly Gannet and I took our places at a table in the window where we were able to peer smugly at the Winchmore Hillites out in the cold.

Browsing through the menu, we were pleasantly surprised at the wide variety of meat, fish and vegetarian dishes which promised to be prepared using traditional methods for an "authentic Anatolian taste". Most impressive was the fish section, which offered delights ranging from char-grilled sea bass and sea bream to spicy red mullet fillets cooked in a spicy tomato and garlic sauce.

Gangly Gannet, whose long limbs have often attracted comparisons to the rangy arms of a deep-sea squid, could not resist the fishy lure of pan-fried baby calamari cooked in a garlic, butter, white wine and lemon sauce (£14.95).

I decided to go back to basics and test one of Samdan's grill classics, the chicken shish (£10.95). But it was a close run thing as I was torn by the Izgara kofte – char-grilled meatballs, (£10.95) – and Kuzu Tandir – a tempting oven-cooked lamb special served with tomato sauce (£11.95).

With our salivating beaks beginning to attract strange looks from fellow diners, some soft bread (80p) and olives arrived just in time and we were forced to order another portion of the deliciously flavoured, jewel-like goodies to accompany our mains.

Gangly noted that it is rare to find good squid so far inland and declared his calamari "sublime", also remarking on the well-dressed salad and vegetables "cooked to just the right consistency". At almost £15, the dish was not the cheapest but it is worth shelling out for something that can so easily go wrong but yet was cooked so well.

My chicken was beautifully succulent, but the surprising star of the dish was rice that had been seasoned and flavoured to perfection.

All of the ingredients tasted fresh and of a very high quality, while warm but non-intrusive waiters glided easily around the room allowing us to enjoy our meal with minimal interruption.

All in all, it was a faultless performance. Top marks.

ANOTHER BLOW FOR WOODGATE

By Dominique Stafford

JONATHAN WOODGATE remains confident that he can make a full return to fitness despite suffering yet another injury setback.

After a 16-month spell on the sidelines with a chronic groin injury, the defender made his return to action as a substitute during Tottenham Hotspur's famous 1-0 Champions League win away to AC Milan in the San Siro last Tuesday, but he strained his left abductor muscle during his 30 minutes on the pitch and has been ruled out for at least two weeks.

Despite this, the 31-year-old insists that he can put his injury problems behind him and win a regular spot in the Tottenham team before the end of the season.

"Injuries are part and parcel of the game, but you never give up," he said. "A lot of people said I'd never get back, but I kept fighting and the comments that I'd never get back spurred me on."

"There were a lot of tough days, but it is only you that can get on with it and stay mentally tough and strong and wait for your chance.

"I don't give up. There were a lot of people with different opinions who said I would never play, but I took all of that with a pinch of salt. I am determined to get fully fit – I won't let anyone say that I can't."

"If you want to play football again, you have to be mentally tough. There are things you have to try, and I'm sure that I can play a regular part for Spurs."

Woodgate's contract at Tottenham runs out at the end of the season, but manager Harry Redknapp has offered the England international hope that he will be offered a new deal.

"Hopefully he will get a deal," Redknapp said. "I want him to come back fit. He's a great player."

"I'd love to see him get his career back on track, because when I came here he was one of the first names on the team sheet."

"He's a different class and is one of the best centre-halves around."

Battling Skolars hold Conference outfit to a draw

HEAD coach Joe Mbu admitted to feeling a little disappointed to have only drawn after watching his London Skolars side come agonisingly close to beating Conference side York City Knights in rugby league's Northern Rail Cup on Sunday.

The Skolars had suffered heavy defeats in their previous two outings in the competition, but they put that behind them by more than holding their own against a team who play a division above them – picking up their first points of the season in a 16-16 draw at the New River Stadium.

"It's a game that we could have won, so I'm actually disappointed with the result," Mbu said. "We had them on the back foot, but didn't apply enough pressure."

"We competed against a very good side from the Championship and showed we've got guys with the strength and enthusiasm to challenge, and that's what is key."

Ade Adebisi (two) and Luke May scored tries for the Skolars, with Neil Thorman adding two goals, and it was the hosts who finished the stronger – creating several chances to win the match in the closing stages.

The London Skolars round off their Northern Rail Cup campaign with a trip to the south of France to take on Toulouse Olympique on Saturday.

Meanwhile, the club have confirmed that their Carnegie Challenge Cup clash at home to Egremont Rangers will kick-off at 3.30pm on March 5.
